Getting Old

You sit in a rocking chair and can't get it going.

Your knees buckle, and your belt won't.

You know all the answers, but nobody asks you the questions.

You constantly talk about the price of gasoline.

Your ears are hairier than your head.

You have thrown out the better part of the last several half-gallon jugs of milk, but still can't bring yourself to buy the pint cartons.

What Getting Old Means To Bill Hall

- My body feels older than my mind
- My energy level is still pretty good (for an old guy)
- I still feel I have something to offer the fertilizer industry!
- I just cant remember what it is!
- I have several projects I want to complete, but I no longer have a lab to complete them.
- I still love meeting young people, even the ones under 60!

Chemists Have A Sense Of Humor Too!

- This joke is sodium funny... I slapped my neon that one.
- A proton and a neutron are walking down the street. The proton says, "Wait, I dropped an electron help me look for it." The neutron says, "Are you sure?" The proton replies, "I'm positive."
- What do you call a tooth in a glass of water? A one molar solution!
- A neutron walked into a bar and asked how much for a drink. The bartender replied, "for you, no charge."
- The noble gases walk into a bar. No one reacts.

Chemists Have A Sense Of Humor Too!

- Sulfur and oxygen were best buds. They lived far from each other, so in order for oxygen to chat with his pal, he had to use his sulfone!
- Want to hear a joke about nitrogen oxide? NO.
- Why did the chemist's pants keep falling down? He had no acetol!
- First man orders "I'd like H₂O". The second man orders "I'd like H₂O too". The second man died.
- Old chemists never die, they only fail to react
- I'm running out of chemistry jokes. All the good ones argon.
